Police: Shooting at New Orleans Playground Wounds 16

(AP) Hundreds of people were gathered at a New Orleans playground for a block party and music video shoot when two groups in the crowd opened fire on each other, wounding 16 people in the shocking Sunday evening violence, police said. Police were on their way to break up a big crowd at Bunny Friend Playground when gunfire erupted at the park in the city's 9th Ward, the police said in a statement Sunday. Police said 10 people were taken to the hospital in ambulances while another six were taken in private vehicles. Photos of the scene showed emergency workers wheeling some of the wounded to ambulances on gurneys while other people who appeared to be in pain lay on the ground. Investigators don't know what started the shooting, police spokesman Tyler Gamble said. He said all the victims are listed in stable condition. He said the victims suffered either direct gunshot wounds or were grazed by bullets. Large stadium lights lit up the park Sunday night as police continued to work the crime scene. Witnesses told police that the gunmen ran off after the shooting was over. Mayor Mitch Landrieu, speaking in a news conference aired on WWL-TV, called on people who were in the park to come forward with information. The police have also asked people who might have any video of the shooting to bring it to police.

International News – Significant Events

Soldiers Patrol Brussels, Guard EU Buildings, After Overnight Arrests

(Reuters) Soldiers patrolled the streets of Brussels and guarded European Union buildings on the third day of a security lockdown on Monday, as police hunted a suspected Islamist militant who has been on the run since this month's attacks in Paris. Belgian national Salah Abdeslam has not been found despite 19 raids and 16 arrests overnight, and authorities are still warning of possible imminent attacks like those in the French capital, in which 130 people were killed. Belgian police fear he has returned home to launch new attacks. The metro, museums and schools, many shops and cinemas will stay shut on Monday in the usually bustling EU capital where many staff will stay to work from home. On the Grand Place, a historic central square that usually draws crowds of tourists and local people, an armored military vehicle was parked under an illuminated Christmas tree. NATO, which had raised its alert level since the Paris attacks of Nov. 13, said its headquarters in the city were open, but some staff had been asked to work from home and external visits had been cancelled. EU institutions were also open, albeit with the soldiers patrolling outside. Prime Minister Charles Michel said the city of 1.2 million will remain on Belgium's fourth and highest level of security threat, meaning the threat of an attack was "serious and imminent." "What we fear is an attack similar to the one in Paris, with several individuals who could possibly launch several attacks at the same time in multiple locations," he told a news conference. Authorities were due to review the situation again on Monday afternoon.

Cal EOC Incident – 2014 Drought

- SOC / Inland REOC remains activated in support of 2014 Drought

Weather of Concern.

- Dry with above normal daytime highs until this afternoon. Weather pattern changes tonight into early Thursday as a cold Pacific storm moves into Northern California. The brunt of the storm will be throughout the day Tuesday. Showers will taper off on Wednesday, although, there may be some light lingering Sierra showers into Thursday morning.
- A cold-core low pressure system will begin impacting California on Tuesday. Snow levels will fall to near 2,000' by Wednesday afternoon, bringing the threat of hazardous travel conditions for holiday travelers. Temperatures will be cold late week with the potential for a widespread San Joaquin Valley freeze.
- A strong low pressure system will slowly move through the Great Basin Tuesday night through Thursday, bringing much colder air and some moisture with it. This set-up will result in strong, gusty winds and scattered light showers Tuesday night through Thursday morning. Wind gusts from the west and northwest, locally 55-65 mph for mountains and deserts; 20-30 mph west of the mountains. Snow levels will fall to around 4000-4500 feet through the day Wednesday.
- Astronomical High Tides will bring minor flooding of low-lying coastal areas of San Diego County and Orange County during the early mornings from Tuesday through Thursday. The greatest risk of coastal flooding will be during the high tide Wednesday morning.

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

Eureka Weather:

A Pacific storm system will bring colder temperatures along with rain, mountain snow, and small hail tonight through early Wednesday.

Medford Weather:

A developing storm system over the northeast Pacific Ocean will bring widespread snow to elevations above 2000 feet Tuesday into Wednesday morning. Rain and snow showers are expected Tuesday afternoon in an unstable air mass with the potential for some thunder all the way from the coast to the Cascades. Weather conditions will dry out on Wednesday. Some snow showers are possible down to the west side valley floors Wednesday morning but travel conditions will be much improved along and west of the Cascades. Very cold temperatures will follow this weather system with temperatures 10-15 degrees below normal.

Reno Weather:

Dry and mild conditions will prevail through this evening. A very cold upper trough will then bring much colder weather the rest of the week. Strong gusty winds will precede the cold front on Tuesday with snow beginning across northeast California early Tuesday and spreading to all areas Tuesday night and Wednesday. There will be a break in heavier snow showers for Thursday and Friday with another chance of snow possible next weekend.

San Francisco Weather:

Cooler weather is forecast today as a dry weather system moves across Northern California and onshore flow develops. A cold front will spread rain across the region on Tuesday with showers expected to follow the front late Tuesday night into Wednesday morning. This weather system will produce only light to moderate amounts of rain. It will be a cold system with light snow likely in the hills above 3000 feet by Tuesday night and Wednesday morning. Dry weather will return by Thanksgiving Day, but cool conditions are forecast through the end of the week and into the weekend.

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY:

Sacramento Weather:

Dry and mild weather will continue this afternoon. Pattern changes tonight as a colder Pacific storm brings precipitation late tonight through Wednesday. Drier weather expected Thanksgiving.

Hanford Weather:

Temperatures will continue to be above normal today as high pressure over the region weakens. A cold storm system dropping out of the Gulf of Alaska will move into the region Tuesday and Wednesday bringing rain and snow as well as much colder temperatures.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles Weather:

A cooling trend will begin today as a weak trough of low pressure passes through Northern California. A second, much colder low pressure system will bring scattered showers to parts of the region late Tuesday through Wednesday, followed by seasonably cool weather through the end of the week. There is a slight chance that another low pressure system will bring rain to the area next weekend.

Extreme Southwestern California including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

Weak high pressure aloft will give way to low pressure through Wednesday. Onshore winds will increase today bringing a return of marine layer clouds and humidity. It will be cooler today and then sharply cooler midweek with a chance for showers at times. Strong westerly winds will develop over the mountains and deserts Tuesday and Wednesday. Some of the showers will turn to snow in the mountains as the colder air arrives. Continued cool conditions with just a small chance of showers along and west of the mountains expected Thanksgiving Day. Slightly warmer temperatures forecast for Friday and then another chance for showers on Saturday.

Southeast California Weather:

Dry and warm weather will continue through Tuesday. Afternoon temperatures each day will warm to near 80 degrees across the lower deserts. A strong and unseasonably cold Pacific weather system is forecast to deepen into the Desert Southwest from Wednesday onward into the upcoming weekend resulting in breezy to windy conditions and cooler temperatures.
